

Grass

By rune

Published on Stories Space on 05 Oct 2016

No flowers are growing in our garden...

<https://www.storiesspace.com/stories/musings/grass.aspx>

I am replanting my basil for they are growing a lot and it smells so wonderful, so are my mint and aloe vera. Yes, herbs are all my plants, I can't seem to grow flowers in my garden. My husband gave me a rose garden, and it died on me because I didn't give them the attention they needed. He bought the sunflower plant for me to grow and I drown them because I lavishly gave them all of my attention that they may need and more. Grass only blooms in them now a days, the one I never cared to look at. I adore the grass flowers, lately. They are my companions when I'm alone and on my saddest days, but husband said to pull the grass from the garden to plant a new one. This made me cry for they are beautiful just to pull off to die. Why just plant a new one and keep the grass? I don't understand, do we really need a new plant or it's just what he likes to have, pull the old and replace with a new one. Shouldn't we just grow them and see how they will look blooming? He just doesn't care at all if the grass died. I'll just put them in a pot to grow. They'll survive, anyways they are used to surviving the worst.