

Love's Shadow

by Hayley Northbridge

Love's Shadow

By hayley

Published on Stories Space on 16 Mar 2015

copyright held by the real person behind Hayley Northbridge {2013} and continuing Copyright 2013
All Rights Reserved permission is granted to publish and view this material on the site storiesspace.com

<https://www.storiesspace.com/stories/poetry/loves-shadow.aspx>

Love is but a shadow In the shadow of evening Where sunlight sinks Drowning In reflecting silver Of moon and stars Their light A beacon for Lovers To begin Are you her? She who follows Silent Through cloister hall passage To my door? Not a knocking enter Just a knowing glance Drawn in by our fire No words Eyes greet My blush grows brighter Than the candle's flame Reflecting on my young breasts A finger light on lips Makes me silent There are no words for this Just half moaned sighs And pleasure's touch It is you! Only you lift my yearning From its dreaming To unimagined reality Only you breathe life Being To the cascading torrents Of love The night brings forth Strange sounds None louder Than my screaming heartbeat My soul searches for you In its longing Tonight will pass So slowly I will it so! Yet morning breaks Too early And you will leave me Until when? Soft morning light Dances gold across your skin Your shadow breathes Then brushes its leaving Soft fingers again Silence my thoughts Your lips soft kiss goodbye No words Yet a sigh You are gone